

In the 1750s Americans were arguably the happiest people on Earth. They had the highest standard of living and more political freedom than any other people on the planet. Yet a generation later they were so discontented—and so outraged—that they were ready to go to war to start a new nation. What brought about so great a change in so little time?